

STTI Master Requirements Doc — For Replit

One document, ordered top to bottom. Work through sections in order — later sections depend on earlier ones.

PART 1: ARCHITECTURE

1.1 Current state

Live site (spiritualtourstoindia.com) is served through Cloudflare and is the OLD build: 6 tour pages, 9 destination pages, footer says "2025."

The 24-page build lives in Replit and has never been deployed to the live domain.

FastAPI in Replit currently does two jobs: serves static HTML files AND handles the `/api/leads` enquiry endpoint + Postgres.

1.2 Target architecture

Do not serve the marketing pages from FastAPI/Replit long-term. A single-region Python process replacing Cloudflare's CDN is a downgrade in TTFB, which affects both Core Web Vitals and crawl budget.

1.3 Migration steps

Export the current live URL list from Search Console (Pages report) before touching anything — this is the source of truth for what must not break.

Known live URLs to preserve or 301-redirect if renamed:

/tours/golden-triangle.html
/tours/south-india.html
/tours/tamil-nadu-kerala.html
/tours/karnataka.html
/tours/char-dham.html
/tours/buddha-circuit.html
/destinations/varanasi.html, rishikesh.html, bodh-gaya.html, haridwar.html, south-india.html, himalayan-sanctuaries.html, hampi.html, tiruvannamalai.html, kanyakumari.html

Strip `FileResponse`/`StaticFiles` serving from FastAPI. Keep only `/api/leads` and any admin routes. Add explicit CORS:

`allow_origins`: `https://spiritualtourstoindia.com`, `https://www.spiritualtourstoindia.com` (never `*` — this endpoint writes to a database).

Copy the static files (already static HTML, confirmed — no Jinja templates, no render step needed) into the GitHub repo, preserving directory structure.

Deploy FastAPI to its own subdomain (`api.spiritualtourstoindia.com`).

Update every tour page's form JS to POST to the new API URL instead of the old relative `/api/leads`.

Add a `_redirects` file at the repo root for any renamed URL (301, permanent).

Test end to end before announcing anything: submit a real enquiry, confirm it lands in Postgres AND the notification email arrives.

Regenerate `sitemap.xml`, resubmit in Search Console.

Cloudflare Pages config: framework preset None, build command empty, output directory `/`.

1.4 Fix while migrating (small, currently broken, all confirmed live)

Title tag and footer say "2025" → change to 2026 or drop the year entirely.

Footer "Privacy Policy" and "Terms of Service" link to `#` → point to real pages.

Footer "Visa Guide," "Packing List," "Transportation Guide" link generically to `smukti.com/blog` → link each to its specific post.

Contact form's tour dropdown only lists the original 6 tours → expand once the publish waves below are live.

Some pages hotlink `images.unsplash.com` → move into `assets/images/` in the repo.

PART 2: CONTENT AUDIT — VERDICT ON ALL 24 EXISTING PAGES

Do not publish all 24 at once. Publishing near-duplicate or thin content in one batch risks Google reading the whole set as low-quality, which can suppress indexation of the good pages too.

Verdict	Pages	Action before publish
Ship as-is	sacred-geometry, festival-tours, goa-wellness, rishikesh-yoga, love-alchemy, buddha-circuit	Move to new lead-form template if not already; add breadcrumb + related-tours block (Part 5)
Duplicate — merge to one	golden-triangle.html + golden-triangle-spiritual.html	Keep URL <code>golden-triangle.html</code> (already indexed). Move the "beyond checklist tourism" content from the <code>-spiritual</code> version into it. Delete the duplicate file — do not publish both.
Related but genuinely distinct — differentiate on-page, keep all three	ancestral-healing, varanasi-spirituality, grieving-grace	Confirmed by the business as three separately bookable Smukti experiences with different formats, group sizes, and audiences. Rewrite required (Part 3) so the difference is visible in the text, not just in the concept.
Rewrite for specificity + rename	himalayan-trek → "Kumaon Himalaya Trek," delhi-uttarakhand → "Delhi to the Himalaya: A First-Timer's India," sacred-feminine-cycle	Currently too vague (no named route/valley) or overlapping with Char Dham/Golden Triangle/Kerala Ayurveda. Full rewrite in Part 3.
Thin — rewrite before shipping, do not ship in current form	silver-years, women-rising, creative-awakening	No named places, generic wellness-retreat structure, indistinguishable from templates found on any wellness site worldwide. Full rewrite in Part 3.
Minor overlap, low priority	chakra-awakening, sound-healing	Both feature Tibetan bowls but have distinct core theses. No content change required; just don't cross-link both from the same context.
Match live site, lower risk (already indexed)	kerala-ayurveda, karnataka, south-india, tamil-nadu-kerala, char-dham	Ship on new template with breadcrumb/related-tours added. No content risk since these already rank.

Net result: ship ~10-13 pages fully ready, 1 duplicate resolved to 1, 3 pages rewritten for specificity, 3 pages rewritten from thin to real, 3 Varanasi pages kept as 3 with differentiation added.

PART 3: FULL REWRITTEN CONTENT (ready to paste into pages)

Voice rules — apply to every page rewritten, and to any future page:

Explain every Sanskrit/Hindi term the first time it appears, in plain words, same sentence.

Name the discomfort or oddness before the reader has to ask ("you might find this strange at first").

Short sentences, contractions ("you'll" not "you will").

No mystical adjective without a concrete image right next to it. Never "profound transformation" alone.

Day-by-day beats, not theme grids — sequence is what makes tours feel real and distinct from each other.

Cut "sacred container," "holding space," "divine feminine energy," "cosmic principles" unless immediately made concrete.

Every page differentiates itself from its nearest sibling in one sentence near the top, using the sibling's actual name (creates natural internal-link anchor text too).

IMPORTANT — before publishing: every day-by-day itinerary detail below is a plausible construction written to demonstrate structure and voice. None of it is confirmed against Smukti's actual operations. Someone who runs these tours must verify or correct every specific claim (ritual timing, which day what happens, guide credentials, group size) before this goes live. Publishing invented specifics as fact is worse than the vague version it replaces.

3.1 Varanasi: Grieving Grace (Loss & Transformation) — 8 Days

(Keep existing title/meta description — already specific and good.)

Differentiation callout (place near top of page):

Varanasi has three journeys on this site, and people sometimes ask which one is "theirs." Here's the honest answer: this one is for grief you're actually carrying right now — a death, a divorce, a job you loved that ended, anything that's left a hole. If you want to think deeply about death as an idea, our Varanasi: Philosophy of Death journey is more your speed. If you're trying to understand family patterns that go back generations, look at Ancestral Healing. This one is simpler than either: you're hurting, and we're going to sit with that, in a place that's built for exactly this.

Tour Philosophy: Varanasi is the one city in India where nobody pretends death isn't happening. You'll see it from your hotel window — smoke rising from the cremation ghats, all day, every day, for probably three thousand years now. Families bring their dead here because Hindus believe dying in Varanasi, or having your ashes put in the Ganga here, is about as close to a shortcut to liberation as you can get.

That might sound heavy, or even a little morbid, and we understand if your first reaction is "why would I go on holiday to watch cremations." Fair question. Here's the thing: because nobody here is hiding from death, something shifts when you sit with your own grief in this city. You stop feeling like the only person in the room who's thinking about loss. Everyone around you is too — they're just doing it in the open, on the riverbank, instead of behind closed doors.

This isn't therapy, and we're not therapists. What we offer is space, some very old rituals that were designed exactly for this purpose, and people around you who are carrying something similar.

Day by Day:

Day 1 — Arrival, settling in. Evening walk along the ghats, first Ganga Aarti (the nightly fire ceremony on the river — priests swing burning lamps in unison while thousands watch from boats and steps). No rituals yet, just getting used to the place.

Day 2-3 — Sunrise boat ride when the ghats are quietest. First grief circle — small group, talk as much or as little as you want. A priest explains what actually happens at a Hindu funeral and why, so the cremation ghats stop feeling alien.

Day 4 — The ghat ritual: a small ceremony by the river with a priest's guidance — lighting a lamp, saying something (aloud or silently) to what you've lost, letting it go into the water.

Day 5-6 — Quieter days. Writing letters to whoever or whatever you've lost, not for anyone to read. More grief circle time. Day trip to Sarnath, where Buddha gave his first teaching after his own enlightenment.

Day 7-8 — Final circle, sharing what shifted if you want to. Time to walk the ghats alone before flying home.

Who Should Come: People actively grieving something, recent or years old — death, divorce, estrangement, a career that ended, a diagnosis. You don't need to be "spiritual." You need to be willing to sit in a small group and be honest. Group size: 4-6.

3.2 Varanasi: Ancestral Healing (Family Patterns) — 7-8 Days

Differentiation callout:

This journey isn't really about your own grief — it's about patterns handed down to you before you were born. Families pass on more than eye colour: money anxiety, ways of loving that skip a generation, fights nobody remembers the start of. Indian families have a specific set of rituals for this called Shraddha, and this week uses them as a structured way to look at what you inherited and decide what you're keeping. If you're grieving someone specific and recent, Grieving Grace will suit you better.

Tour Philosophy: Every Hindu family, even ones who don't consider themselves religious, does something called Shraddha at some point — a ceremony to honour ancestors, usually done by the eldest son, usually once a year. It sounds like a footnote until you realise what it's built on: the idea that we're not separate from the people who came before us. Their unfinished business becomes, quietly, ours.

You don't have to believe that literally for this week to be useful. Most Western visitors come to this less as a religious act and more as a structured way to ask: why does my family go silent instead of arguing? Where did this need to achieve, achieve, achieve actually start? Was it really mine to begin with?

Day by Day:

Day 1-2 — Arrival, and mapping your family tree — parents, grandparents, further if you know it — marking repeating patterns.

Day 3-4 — The Shraddha ceremony: a priest performs a traditional ancestor-honouring ritual on your behalf at the river — offerings of rice, water, sesame seeds. You'll name, out loud, who you're doing this for, even ancestors you never met.

Day 5 — Letters to specific ancestors, not for anyone to read. Some people burn theirs afterward, by the Ganga.

Day 6-7 — Guided conversation on which inherited patterns you're keeping (some are worth it — resilience, humour, closeness) and which you're consciously not carrying forward.

Day 8 — Short closing ritual, departure.

Who Should Come: People who've noticed a repeating pattern in their family and want a structured, somewhat ceremonial way to look at it directly.

3.3 Varanasi: Philosophy of Death — 4-5 Days

(Rename from "Death & Spirituality" — same tour, warmer framing.)

Differentiation callout:

This is the thinking person's version. You're not necessarily grieving anything right now, and you're not trying to untangle family history — you're curious, in a genuine and maybe uncomfortable way, about how a culture that's been staring at death for three thousand years thinks about it. If you're carrying real grief, go to Grieving Grace instead — this page is built for the head more than the heart.

Tour Philosophy: Cremation in Varanasi isn't hidden away the way it is almost everywhere else in the world. It happens on open riverside platforms, in public, all day. Locals walk past it the way you'd walk past a bus stop — not because death doesn't matter here, but because the whole religious framework treats death as one stop on a much longer journey, not an ending. The word for that final liberation is moksha, and Varanasi is considered one of the best places on earth to get there.

You don't need to believe any of this for the trip to be useful. Most visitors leave not converted to anything, just recalibrated.

Day by Day:

Day 1 — Arrival, sunset walk, first Ganga Aarti. No explanations yet — see it once before anyone tells you what it means.

Day 2 — Sunrise boat ride. Afternoon session with a scholar explaining reincarnation, karma, and moksha in plain terms — the intellectual spine of the trip.

Day 3 — Manikarnika Ghat, the main cremation ghat, guided and respectful, observed from a distance. Usually the hardest day and the one people talk about most afterward.

Day 4 — Sarnath, where Buddha gave his first sermon — a useful contrast, since Buddhism grew partly as a response to these same questions.

Day 5 — Closing conversation, departure.

Who Should Come: Curious, thoughtful travellers — not necessarily religious or grieving anything specific — who want to understand how another culture thinks about death, taught properly.

3.4 Himalayan Trek → Rename: "Kumaon Himalaya Trek: Kainchi Dham to Nag Tibba"

Title tag:

Kumaon Himalaya Trek: Kainchi Dham to Nag Tibba		7-10 Days		Spiritual Tours to India
---	--	-----------	--	--------------------------

Meta

description:

Trek the gentler Himalaya – Kumaon's forests, temples, and Nag Tibba ridge – combined with meditation at Kainchi Dham. 7-10 days, moderate fitness. $3,500-4,800.

Differentiation callout:

If you're picturing a hard, high-altitude pilgrimage to four ancient temples, that's our Char Dham Yatra — 12-14 days, real altitude, real physical demand. This trek is gentler: Kumaon hills, not the high Garhwal peaks, moderate walking, not extreme.

Tour Philosophy: There's an old idea in India that walking to a sacred place matters as much as arriving. We won't pretend a week of hiking fixes your life, but something genuinely does happen after four or five days walking through pine forest with no phone signal. This trek moves through the Kumaon hills — the gentler, greener part of the Indian Himalaya — including real time at Kainchi Dham, the ashram associated with the guru Neem Karoli Baba, whose devotees once included a young Steve Jobs. You don't need to know that history to enjoy it — it's just a peaceful place to sit.

Day by Day:

Day 1-2 — Delhi to Nainital, a lake town, for gentle acclimatisation.

Day 3 — Full day at Kainchi Dham, quiet, no pressure, just sitting by the river through it.

Day 4-6 — The trek: 3-4 hours walking most days through forest villages and small temples, toward the Nag Tibba ridge (views, not technical climbing).

Day 7-8 — Descent, final night in the hills, reflection time.

Day 9-10 (optional) — Extra forest walks or another night at Kainchi Dham.

Who Should Come: People wanting a real hike, not Everest Base Camp — moderate fitness, several hours walking most days, no technical climbing.

3.5 Delhi + Uttarakhand → Reframe: "Delhi to the Himalaya: A First-Timer's India"

Title tag:

Delhi to the Himalaya: A First-Timer's India	8-10 Days	Spiritual Tours to India
--	-----------	--------------------------

Meta description:

See two Indias in one trip – Delhi's temples and history, then the quiet of the Uttarakhand hills. Built for first-time visitors with limited time. $2,800-4,500.

Differentiation callout:

This trip exists for one reason: you don't have three weeks. If you did, we'd point you to the full Golden Triangle tour, or the proper Char Dham Yatra. This is what we'd suggest instead with 8-10 days.

Tour Philosophy: Most first trips to India go one of two ways: all city (exhausting in a good way) or all mountains (restful, but you never see how most Indians live). This is neither — both, in a week and a half, without rushing either half. Delhi first, because the layers of history are genuinely strange — Mughal tombs next to British-era buildings next to temples older than both. Then Uttarakhand ("land of the gods") for something completely different.

Day by Day:

Day 1-3 — Delhi, not a checklist: Lotus Temple, Akshardham, Humayun's Tomb, a Sikh gurdwara, with real time at each.

Day 4 — Drive up to the hills.

Day 5-7 — Uttarakhand: one or two accessible Char Dham temples if season allows, gentle walks, mountain-town nights.

Day 8-10 (optional) — Deeper hill stay or slower return to Delhi.

Who Should Come: First-timers with 8-10 days who want a real sense of both cities and mountains, not just one.

3.6 Sacred Feminine Cycle — keep title, deepen content

Differentiation callout:

Our Kerala Ayurveda tour is general wellness and detox, open to anyone. This one is narrower: it's built entirely around your menstrual cycle, using Ayurveda's approach to it. If you want general rejuvenation, take the Kerala tour. If your cycle itself is the actual reason you're here, you're in the right place.

Tour Philosophy: Ayurveda, India's traditional medicine system, has had a working theory of the menstrual cycle for a very long time — before Western medicine started taking period pain seriously. The core idea: your body isn't the same all month, so why do the same yoga, eat the same food, every day? This happens in Kerala because that's where Ayurveda has stayed most intact as real medicine, not a spa treatment.

Day by Day:

Day 1 — Arrival, one-on-one consultation with a female Ayurvedic physician.

Day 2-3 — Cycle-specific yoga, different practices by phase.

Day 4-5 — Abhyanga (warm oil massage) and shirodhara (warm oil poured slowly over the forehead) tailored to your dosha (constitutional type).

Day 6-7 — Personalised herbal/dietary protocol to take home.

Who Should Come: Women dealing with PMS, painful periods, irregular cycles, or curious about a different framework for their body. Ages roughly 20-50.

3.7 Silver Years Awakening — add real content

Differentiation callout:

Every other tour on this site could work for any age. This one is built specifically around a slower pace and conversations that matter differently once you're past fifty.

Tour Philosophy: Getting older in India generally means getting more respected, not less visible — elders are consulted, seated first, listened to. This trip is paced to respect your time and your knees — fewer stops per day, more rest, comfortable hotels — but not watered down.

Day by Day:

Day 1-2 — Delhi, gently: heritage sites, no early starts unless you want one.

Day 3-5 — Rishikesh: gentle yoga (chairs available), a conversation with an elder teacher about a long life, unscheduled time.

Day 6-8 — Varanasi: sunrise boat, evening river ceremony, time to think.

Day 9-10 (optional) — Extra rest or slower travel home.

Who Should Come: Travellers 50-75 wanting meaning without a punishing pace. Group size 6-8, similar life stage.

3.8 Creative Awakening — add real content

Differentiation callout:

This one's for people who make things — writers, painters, musicians, anyone whose work depends on ideas showing up. If you've felt creatively stuck, this is aimed at exactly that.

Tour Philosophy: Ask an Indian classical musician where a good improvisation comes from and you'll rarely hear "talent" — more often "it came through me." This retreat borrows practices built for that: meditation aimed at quieting the inner critic, writing/sketching in genuinely inspiring places, and kirtan (call-and-response devotional singing) as a way to use your voice without judging it.

Day by Day:

Day 1-2 — Rishikesh: morning meditation for creative flow, journaling by the Ganges.

Day 3-5 — Sacred sites as studio: sketch, write, or photograph in temples and forest clearings — working spaces, not tourist stops.

Day 6-7 — Kirtan sessions, simple voice-liberation exercises (for non-singers too).

Day 8-10 (optional) — Extra days to finish a personal project with facilitator feedback.

Who Should Come: Writers, artists, musicians, or anyone with a creative block. Bring an actual project.

PART 4: SEO — INTERNATIONAL INTENT & DEDUPLICATION

4.1 Kill the India-domestic-intent leak

The destination pages currently rank #1 for domestic queries with 0% CTR — "famous temples in chennai," "ancient temples in india," "old temples in chennai." Ranking #1 for the wrong audience with zero clicks is pure downside: it signals to Google that the site is a general temple-reference resource, not an international trip-planning site.

Requirement for every destination page: reframe within the first 100 words for a foreign traveler planning a visit — currency in USD/EUR, visa framing for US/UK/EU/Australian passport holders, arrival logistics from an international airport, explicit "as a first-time visitor" framing. Any page that's closer to a general history article than a planning guide should be rewritten or set to `noindex`.

4.2 Fix keyword cannibalization

The homepage is the ONLY page allowed to target head terms: "spiritual tour(s) to/in India," "spiritual travel to India," "spiritual journey to India." No tour or destination page should repeat these as a primary heading target — each targets only its own specific term. Every tour/destination page links back to the homepage using head-term anchor text at least once.

4.3 Diagnose the one clear quick win

`custom spiritual tours india` ranks position 4.4, 143 impressions, zero clicks — an anomaly at that position. Check the live SERP snippet, check whether it's being absorbed into an AI Overview citation instead of a clickable link, and rewrite the title/meta to match commercial "build a custom tour" intent directly if the snippet doesn't already promise that.

4.4 Publish in waves, not all at once

Wave 1: the ~10-13 "ship as-is" pages from Part 2, plus any genuinely new clusters (Kanyakumari, Divya Desam, Rajasthan family, if built).

Wave 2 (after Wave 1 shows indexation, ~10-14 days later): remaining rewritten pages.

Wave 3: last, the pages matching the already-indexed live site (lower risk). Check Search Console's Pages report between waves — if Wave 1 sits in "Discovered/Crawled — not indexed," stop and fix before Wave 2.

4.5 Family Travel section (net-new, homepage)

Add a dedicated homepage section after the tour grid: "Traveling to India with Family." Must answer directly: is India safe for families, what ages does this suit, realistic driving time per day, what kids actually enjoy (forts, camels, tigers), food for picky eaters. Links to any family-oriented tours and to a filtered tour grid view.

PART 5: NAVIGATION — CURRENTLY MISSING, BUILD THIS

Confirmed: every tour page currently has exactly one nav element — "← Back to Home." No breadcrumb, no in-page jump nav, no cross-links between tours. This is Section 7 of the growth plan, currently unbuilt.

Build, in priority order:

Breadcrumb: `[Home > Tours > [Tour Name]]` on every tour/destination page, paired with `[BreadcrumbList]` schema (Part 6).

"Related Journeys" block near the bottom of every tour page — 2-3 genuinely related tours. The three Varanasi pages must always cross-link each other. Kumaon Trek links to Char Dham and Rishikesh. Wellness-cluster tours link to each other.

In-page jump nav for long pages — Overview | Day by Day | What's Included | FAQ | Enquire — sticky or top-of-page anchor links, especially for mobile.

Full site nav in the tour-page header — Home / Tours / Travel Resources / Contact, matching the homepage nav, not just a single back-link.

Build this now, before publishing more pages — cheap now, expensive to retrofit across 20+ pages later.

6.1 Correct two misconceptions before building

FAQPage schema no longer produces a visible Google rich result for a site like this (Google restricted it in August 2023 to authoritative government/health sites only). Still add it for semantic value, but don't expect the SERP accordion back.

TouristTrip has no dedicated Google rich result either. It helps entity understanding, not visible search appearance. Keep using it, but don't oversell its ranking impact.

6.2 What to build, in priority order

Organization // TravelAgency — sitewide, one block: name, url, logo, email, telephone, sameAs for real social/business profiles.

BreadcrumbList — build from the same data source as the Part 5 breadcrumb UI. This DOES render visibly in search results.

Event — for any tour with real fixed departure dates (Discovering Shiva already has these on the homepage — Nov 7-16 2025, Dec 5-14 2025, Jan 21-30 2026, Feb 6-15 2026). Include name, startDate, endDate, location, offers (price/currency/availability/booking URL), organizer. This is the single highest-payoff schema addition available right now.

TouristTrip — standardize across all tour pages. Correct existing instances: rishikesh-yoga.html's schema price is hardcoded to 1800 but the visible range is $1,800-3,200 — fix mismatches like this, since inaccurate schema vs. displayed price can trigger a manual action.

FAQPage — add last, lowest visible payoff, but free once FAQ content is final.

6.3 Do not add

AggregateRating // Review — do NOT wrap the homepage testimonials in review schema. They are illustrative copy, not verified sourced reviews. Fabricated review schema is a common cause of manual actions.

Product // Offer as standalone e-commerce schema — wrong entity type; these are itineraries, not checkout SKUs. Use offers nested inside TouristTrip instead.

FAQPage on non-FAQ content to bait the old rich result — actively detected and penalized.

Test every schema addition with Google's Rich Results Test before publishing.

PART 7: IMAGES

7.1 Rule (already established, restated for this pass)

No hotlinked images from `images.unsplash.com` or any external host. Every image lives in the repo under `assets/images/`, compressed (hero ≤300KB, cards ≤150KB, WebP preferred with JPG fallback), with descriptive keyword-rich alt text and `loading="lazy"` below the fold.

7.2 Add stock images wherever currently missing or now mismatched

Several pages in this doc either have no image at all, still hotlink Unsplash, or were just renamed/rewritten so their existing image no longer matches the content. Source real, relevant stock images (or Smukti's own photography if available) for:

Hero image on every rewritten page in Part 3 — especially the two renamed pages, where the old image likely doesn't match the new framing:

Kumaon Himalaya Trek (was "Himalayan Spiritual Trek") — needs a Kumaon-specific image: pine/oak forest trail, Kainchi Dham ashram exterior, or the Nag Tibba ridge. Not a generic high-Himalaya peak shot (that reads as Char Dham, causing the same confusion the rewrite was meant to fix).

Delhi to the Himalaya (was "Delhi + Uttarakhand") — an image that visually signals "two parts" if possible, or split hero treatment (city + hills).

Varanasi: Philosophy of Death (renamed from "Death & Spirituality") — can likely keep the existing Varanasi ghat image if it's a good match; check the current "Death & Spirituality" hero for macabre/graphic framing and replace if the image itself undercuts the softer tone of the new copy.

Sacred Feminine Cycle, Silver Years, Creative Awakening — currently thin pages; source images that show the specific content added (an Ayurvedic consultation setting, a 50+ traveler group in a comfortable setting, a journaling/creative scene in a temple or forest clearing) rather than generic wellness stock.

"Related Journeys" cards (Part 5) — each card needs a small thumbnail image; reuse each tour's own hero image at a smaller crop rather than sourcing new images for these.

Family Travel section (Part 4.5) — needs its own supporting images once built: a family at a Rajasthan fort, a tiger safari jeep, a kid-friendly moment — none of this currently exists anywhere on the site.

Any destination page reframed for international intent (Part 4.1) — if the rewrite adds new content blocks (arrival logistics, etiquette specifics), consider whether a supporting image is warranted, but don't add images purely to fill space — text-only sections are fine.

Discovering Shiva Event schema pages — if Event schema (Part 6.2) surfaces this tour anywhere new, confirm it still has its own dedicated hero image (it does on the homepage currently) and that any new touchpoint reuses it rather than a generic Nataraja/Shiva stock image.

7.3 Sourcing guidance

Prefer specific over generic every time — a named waterfall, a named temple gate, a named forest trail beats an unlabeled "spiritual India" stock photo, both for reader trust and because specific alt text (e.g. "Kainchi Dham ashram courtyard in Kumaon" vs. "Himalayan spiritual retreat") does more SEO work. Where a genuinely specific photo isn't available, a well-chosen generic one is acceptable as a placeholder — mark it clearly in code with a comment (`<!-- PLACEHOLDER: replace with real Kainchi Dham photo if available -->`) so it's easy to find and swap later.

PART 8: ACCEPTANCE CHECKLIST

- ☐ Search Console URL export done, diffed against Replit filenames, redirects written for any renamed page
- ☐ FastAPI stripped to API-only, deployed to `api.` subdomain, CORS locked to the real domain
- ☐ Static files copied to GitHub repo, Cloudflare Pages serving them
- ☐ Contact form JS updated to new API URL, tested end to end (Postgres write + email notification confirmed)
- ☐ `golden-triangle-spiritual.html` merged into `golden-triangle.html`, duplicate file removed
- ☐ Three Varanasi pages carry differentiation callouts and day-by-day structure per Part 3
- ☐ `himalayan-trek` renamed/rewritten, `delhi-uttarakhand` reframed, `sacred-feminine-cycle` deepened
- ☐ `silver-years`, `women-rising`, `creative-awakening` rewritten with real place-specific content (Part 3 covers the first two of these three)
- ☐ Destination pages reframed for international intent; Chennai/generic-temple pages fixed or noindexed
- ☐ Homepage head-term consolidation done; tour pages narrowed to their own terms; head-term anchor links added
- ☐ `custom spiritual tours india` CTR anomaly diagnosed and title/meta adjusted
- ☐ Family Travel section added to homepage
- ☐ Breadcrumb + related-tours block + in-page jump nav + full header nav added to every tour page
- ☐ Organization, BreadcrumbList, Event (for fixed-date tours), TouristTrip, FAQPage schema added per Part 6 priority order; no fabricated Review/AggregateRating
- ☐ Stale year, dead legal links, generic footer links, limited contact dropdown all fixed
- ☐ Every rewritten/renamed page in Part 3 has a matching, specific hero image (not hotlinked, not mismatched to old framing) per Part 7
- ☐ Related Journeys card thumbnails in place; Family Travel section images sourced once that section is built
- ☐ Sitemap regenerated and resubmitted after each publish wave
- ☐ Published in 3 waves per Part 4.4, indexation checked between waves
